

It is very difficult to set standards that would prevent blatant partisan politicking on public airwaves in most cases. This is not such a case; the FCC must not allow Sinclair to air "Stolen Honor" on public airwaves.

This maneuver by Sinclair should underline the failure of the FCC to curtail the hegemonic hold a few men have over the dissemination of information on radio and television in this country.